

Seyram Selase serves as the Executive Director of the Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention (ASAP), leading the charge in community health initiatives across Alabama and beyond through both statewide programs and a nationally awarded grant. His strategic guidance at ASAP merited the prestigious 2023 Calhoun County Nonprofit of the Year award, underscoring his skill in managing impactful grants and programs. A product of the Anniston City and Talladega County School systems, Seyram's roots in education underscore his dedication to community development. He is a graduate of Berea College and a Life Member of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Incorporated.

Seyram is also a former elected official, having proudly served as Vice Mayor of the City of Anniston from 2012 to 2016, where he championed initiatives centered on equity, civic engagement, and youth empowerment. His commitment to public trust and safety continues today through his service as a member of the FBI's Community Engagement Council with the Birmingham Field Office.

In addition to his role at ASAP, Seyram is the pioneering President of Cunningham Estates, where he integrates his real estate acumen with a passion for ecotherapy and environmental conservation. As a licensed real estate broker in Alabama, he is adept at assisting families in navigating property ownership, driven by a belief in the potent application of knowledge. Seyram Selase's leadership is marked by a commitment to empowerment and lasting positive change in his community. He resides in Anniston, Alabama with his wife, Maiya Selase.
